

Dr Jo Taylor works in the Department of Health Sciences at the University of York in England, and is involved in the development and evaluation of healthcare interventions and technologies. Previously, Jo worked in the Rehabilitation and Assistive Technology Research Group at the University of Sheffield where she was part of the MALT study (Overcoming the Barriers to Mainstreaming Assisted Living Technologies – <http://malt.group.shef.ac.uk/>), which examined frontline staff adoption and implementation of telehealth. Jo holds a PhD from the University of York, and as a health services researcher has particular expertise in health-care decision making, and innovation adoption and implementation.